

Hive
Women's Institute

The Hive Women's Retreat

September 18-20, 2015

The Toll House, Boonville, CA

We're bringing together fifteen extraordinary female leaders and changemakers for a weekend of connection, inspiration, and redirection.

How alive, connected, and on course are you feeling in your work and life lately? If you're like many extraordinary female leaders and changemakers, you might have a slight feeling of being worn out, isolated, or even on the wrong track.

The Hive Women's Retreat is a chance to reflect and connect deeply with other women, age 21-35, who are walking a similar path. Through the program content you'll have a chance to gain clarity on what lights you up personally and professionally, tap into the confidence you need to take the next big step, and form a supportive community of allies and friends who will help keep you accountable as you move forward.

The retreat will take place in the beautiful Anderson Valley, 2.5 hours north of San Francisco. Participants will meet at a central location in San Francisco at 10 a.m. on Friday, September 18th and carpool together to the retreat site. During the weekend we'll be staying in a lovely historic home in a relaxing natural setting, and we'll enjoy time for both individual reflection and group sessions. We will return to the city by 5 p.m. on Sunday, September 20th.

Cost: $475

(Includes two nights accommodation, meals, activities, and facilitated program)

Apply by September 5th @ hive.org/women

Retreat Team

Victoria Moore

Victoria is an author, educator, and explorer with a passion for helping women come alive. Her adventurous spirit has led her to circumnavigate the globe three times, shoot a documentary film series on international aid effectiveness in eight countries, and embark on multiple expeditions to the Arctic and Antarctica as a polar photographer. She has spent time on every continent and in more than eighty-five countries. Victoria is best known for her work as a pioneering advocate to improve the field of international aid. She started her own social enterprise at age twenty-four and later authored a book on the subject of aid effectiveness called Beyond Good Intentions: A Journey Into the Realities of International Aid. Her work has been featured in O! The Oprah Magazine, The Wall Street Journal, and on NPR. Victoria received her B.A. from Duke University, served as a Fulbright Scholar in Egypt, and obtained an M.Ed degree from Harvard University. These days her greatest joy comes from working with young women and helping them uncover what truly lights them up.

Nadia Mufti

Before helping to launch FactoryX, Hive, and Kuli Kuli, Nadia worked at Ashoka in Washington D.C, where she was Founding Director of Ashoka's A*Year Program, a start-up within the organization designed to recruit social entrepreneurs to work at Ashoka. She is passionate about life design, experience design, mindfulness/meditation, and helping others discover and pursue what makes them come alive. In addition to working on Hive, Nadia is currently launching the FactoryX Fellowship to engage inspired entrepreneurs, makers, and innovators in experimenting with new ways of launching companies with FactoryX. She attended Stanford University where she majored in International Relations and explored the intersection of design thinking and social entrepreneurship through coursework at the Stanford GSB and the d.school.

Asya Tabdili-Azar

Asya is a social entrepreneur focused on leveraging technology and social institutions in order to expand individual and global consciousness. Before joining forces with Hive, Asya worked abroad with tech & social entrepreneurs in India and Iran. While in India, she managed a tech accelerator and filmed a documentary on women entrepreneurs of Southern India. During her time in Iran, she helped organize a TEDx on Kish Island, Iran. Prior to that Asya graduated from UCLA where she majored in Communications and Globalization. At UCLA, she conducted research on the communication of consciousness and founded innergy the largest conscious living organization at UCLA. Having traveled to over 40 countries and lived in 4, Asya identifies as a global citizen and is deeply driven to help create a world where all humans can come together to enhance and celebrate our individual and collective genius!

Apply by September 5th @ hive.org/women